FE IN THE DREAM CYCLE
Ben Johnson

Ben Johnson’s victory in Seoul was one of the world’s greatest displays of athleticism, but he has yet to receive the glory he truly deserves.

By Chris Campo, Mark Lyttle, Charlie Francis

Dwight's Best RF

Confidential sources close to Page House have informed the Tech that the cold fusion data released by B. Stanley Pons and Martin Fleischmann was completely false and had no experimental basis. Furthermore, the two researchers were paid an unknown amount of money by master prankster Dwight Berg, in what is easily the most impressive RF of his career.

This fantastic display of criminal ingenuity originated at the start of first term 1988. It was then that Dwight, searching for an RF that would really screw up the scientific community, thought up the idea of releasing false evidence. A breakthrough in some area of science that was currently the focus of much money and attention.

The problem of disseminating the untrue data still remained, however. Only a timely supply could be delivered by accomplice Andre Ohanian, that Dwight “pay some boys in some two bit college to make the findings public,” saved the operation from failure. The next stage involved scaring the country for some down and out scientist with questionable morals.

After months of searching with no results, Dwight was beginning to give up hope. But his luck took a sudden turn when he found the duo of Pons and Fleischmann. Here were two men who had just abandoned their lives’ dream, the creation of tabletop fusion. With no government funding, they had invested large sums of their own money in a project doomed to failure, and now financial concerns had finally forced them to quit their research. Then Dwight sent them a letter, briefly explaining his idea.

A plan of action was quickly formulated, and soon things were underway. Dwight paid the team, then told them to wait a couple of months so that he could “cover his tracks.”

In order to cause the biggest possible disruption within the scientific world, it was decided that instead of writing a paper revealing the fictitious breakthrough, a press conference would be held. Also, crucial information concerning the alleged “experiment” would be given out bit by bit, to further increase the confusion created.

Because the rest of the scientific community reacted quickly and removed most of the credibility to the cold fusion claim, the damage, measured in lost time and materials, has been small. Despite this, the prank is certainly the most far-reaching of any Dwight has attempted so far.

When confronted with the evidence that connected him to the fraud, Dwight was not at a loss for words: “So you found out, big deal. Just because some dumb fox told you, doesn’t mean you can do anything. You can’t do shit to me. What about those people who said they got similar results? Similar to what, a lie? Those are the the guys you should be going after. By the way, Ben Johnson is a geek.”

Neither Pons nor Fleischmann were available for comment.

There was this dream and it was the only thing I remember about this apartment, just before I started kindergarten. I woke up and there was this dream and it was the only thing I remember about it. It seemed like I was levitating about an inch off my bed. All these snakes were slithering through channels cut in my mattress. They weren’t touching me but I was still scared a lot. I looked by the wall and below this poster of a racing car sat my parents at a younger age, maybe a year out of high school, on a go-cart. Mark Lyttle, the in-depth editor of the California Tech newspaper, was one of two students named National College Journalist of the Year by the Journalism Education Association.

Yesterday, Lyttle said he was pleased and excited by the award. "It's a great honor, and it makes me feel like what I've done has been worth something," he said.

Lyttle was one of 23 college journalists selected as best in their state, making them finalists for the award. He won a $350 scholarship in March when he was selected as California's nominee.

The awards were based on clippings of stories, letters of recommendation and an essay that explained why the student chose journalism as his field of endeavor in college.

Lyttle shared the top award with Dan Reese, a senior from Austin, Texas. Both won $1000 scholarships.

"I think the award validates what my students are doing," said Hall Daily, Lyttle's advisor at Caltech.

Several judges were impressed with his coverage of a sensitive story dealing with the teaching quality at Caltech.

Margaret Johnston, chairman of the selection committee and a faculty member of the College of Journalism at the University of Georgia, praised Lyttle's writing. "The judges were extremely impressed with the strength of his reporting and writing skills," she said.

BRA GRAPHS ARE OFFENSIVE

Dear editors:

Last Friday as I was perusing that day's issue of The California Tech, I was astonished to find a graph comparing breast acceleration figures on the Jogbra and some generic bra. I think I can make up my mind what bra to buy without using some fake graph composed by three horny, oversexed college students. Why you all would even make up a graph like that is beyond me. You three are the biggest fuck-up editors of the Tech I have ever had the mispleasure of reading. I wish someone would put you in your place, and I feel like giving some hints.

So like that Biology dude's stupid list of why they plant redwoods next to buildings, I would like to include The Top 10 Coolest Ways To Inflict Pain on California Tech Editors: (Due to space limitations, the rest of this insightful letter could not be printed in it's entirety -the Eds) and I think that would really show you all not to mess with such an issue.

Sincerely, Fuck You

-an offended bra wearer

For anyone else interested, we found that ad in a city-wide sports publication, but we sure are thankful we didn't put in the ad included on page 12, because we knew that all of you would love it so much. -the Editors
PICO RIVERA RESIDENT CAPTURES RTD OPERATOR OF THE YEAR HONORS -- Rogelio G. Chacon, a veteran of 10 years behind the wheel of an RTD bus, accepts congratulations from fellow operators moments after he was announced as the RTD 1988 Operator of the Year at the New Otani Hotel. RTD officials presented the 42-year-old father of three with a certificate of merit and a check for $250. Chacon has achieved an almost unblemished service record in his 10 years, and has been a finalist in four of the five Bus Roadeo competitions he has entered. Chacon was selected from a field of 12 operators, each named operator of the month during 1988. Winner of this honor is considered to be the District's top bus operator for the year. He and his wife, Lourdes, live in Pico Rivera with their family. Chacon is an avid baseball fan and enjoys playing classical guitar.

1. The SAC: Not only are these toilets the most comfortable (they conform to your butt like they were designed for you personally), but they are also one of the most convenient.

2. N. Mudd: What other building has bathrooms with the dial-a-gender system, I ask you? The marble and wood stalls, nice views, and overall roominess combine to make this building number two.

3. Robinson: The auxiliary sink room and nice airy views make the astronomy building a strong contender.

4. S. Mudd: Any non-house bathroom with a shower in it has a special place in my heart.

5. Braun: Unrivaled in sink design; also has sanitary napkin/tampon dispenser in handicapped lavatory.

6. Tascit House: Well, it may be dirty, but at least no one else uses it.

8. Dabney Hall: Much of the same as Gates, but a tad less interesting.

9. The one across the hall: 'Nuff said.

One of Caltech's most underrated painters, Richard Gerke turns an important corner in this new body of work, adopting a technique associated with a very different art form to give the approach he's long been associated with an almost a decade new depth and vigor. His basic formula has consisted of prismatic, sometimes acaustic, painting described by forceful strokes of paint, color deep and intense and full of contact but somehow the surface whole scheme quite solid as a composition but fluid and determinedly tentative as an image. Of late, Gerke has involved pieces of wood, stretcher bars, even small frames to enhance the dynamism of these angular arrangements, but these have proved only partly successful: he's better off having put aside the approach in most of the work here. The pieces of mirror he has been embedding in and under the paint remain, however, amplifying the painting's anxious flicker. What, then, has Gerke done — replacing the wood — to gain the new visual charge? He's reached for the spray can, the quintessential tool of the graffiti artist. For the most part, graffiti art itself turns into flat, vivid knockdown-pop when it leaves urban spaces for gallery walls; only occasionally graphically gifted graffiti artists (like, say, Chas Bojorquez) make the transition successfully. Gerke isn't concerned with calligraphy, but with the play of two and (rendered) three dimensions, the tension between absent depth and horizontal motion, the furtive brilliance of color. The instantaneousness and luminosity and nervousness of spray can acrylic answer wonderfully to these requirements. Do Gerke's paintings look slick and easy as a result of his taking up this slick, easy medium? Not at all; all that layering and building and piling and embellishing still goes on in Gerke's art, and if anything, the spray technique makes all this effort — and the profound composition it yields — less turgid and more lucid. At Frame House, 341 S. Holliston Ave., thru August 1.

June is upon us, and we, the members of Ricketts House, must say goodbye to many of our friends. Our congratulations go out to Jon Charles and Melissa Mullins, who survived two and a half years of Ricketts House, a record in recent history. Next year we will welcome a new RA, Luca Cotteluzzi.

Heidi Anderson and Andrew Kalliastaki are departing on good terms, and celebrated by making chocolate mousse for the house. Although this was one of the few non-socially-sponsored events we’ve had this term, Heidi and Drew plan to antagonize Bernie until they get reimbursed $65. Most non-seniors will be shocked to see someone other than Sam Weaver and Gabriela Cornejo living in the guest suite next year. Kind as she is, Gabby has offered to give Cherries to anyone who wants to be a good mother to the cat, of whose 9 lives 5 remain, but so far no one has shown an interest.

In anguish over his departure from Snatch, Lindsey Dobbs has formed the Snatch Renovation Committee. No longer will fresh live in a boring sky-blue alley. Scenes from Dr. Seuss books will be painted on the walls over that anyone interested in participating is welcome to contact him.

Everyone looks forward to the wedding of Dan Razin and Laura Smith one week after their graduation June 16th; members of the house will be brought very close together as twenty-five or so of us cram in to four hotel rooms. After a long honeymoon in Europe, Dan and Laura will settle down in Rodenstock, New York, where Dan will attend graduate school and Laura will support him.

The treasurer, tool, and all-around team guy Yovel Lovelace and Jerry Hanus, will depart to StV Women’s, and never be heard from again.

Social events planned to celebrate these and other departures include an RA farewell party: Scoop Fish Babes at Ragging Waters’ thirteenth Saturday, followed by a Party at the Frame House in the evening. Eric Candell and Heidi Anderson’s China sendoff party well, maybe not anymore. It’s TBD, and Papa Migh. Whether or not any of these 6 events will actually occur is still anyone’s guess. Before anybody walks across the members of the house to determine which event he’ll actually organize.

Our fond farewell goes out to ex-Scurve and soon-to-be ex-Dabney President Jon Esher Hamkins, the only person on campus to name a cat after himself. Regarded as the runt of the family, Jon was born September 21, 1968, the last of eight children. Mail sorters in Dabney have detested Jon for years, but now he’s graduating. Jon and Bregie are going to graduate school at the University of Oregon at Eugene. We’ll miss you, Jon, and wish you the best of luck at your new school.
