

Barry Krueger Killed in Traffic Accident

The Fleming RA died in a motorcycle accident Monday in Big Bear

by Cathy Hafer and Lanny Boswell

Barry Krueger died early in the morning of October 29, 1990, from injuries sustained in a motorcycle accident in Big Bear, California. He lost control of the motorcycle when he hit a sawed-off telephone pole. There were no skid marks. Barry was wearing a helmet and driving at normal speeds. He was flown from Big Bear to the San Bernardino County Medical Center for treatment, but died shortly thereafter from internal injuries.

Barry was a Resident Associate of Fleming House, along with Anita Harper, since the fall of 1988. He was a graduate student, recently admitted to candidacy for the Ph.D. in materials science as a student of Thad Vreeland. To quote Dean Brennen, "Few students who have passed through these academic hallways have given as much of themselves to this community."

The flag is at half-staff this week in Barry's memory. Fleming House fired the Cannon at 5:00 Tuesday in his honor, and placed a banner reading "We love you, Barry" at the top of Millikan

Barry Krueger and Anita Harper at Fleming's Formal meal.

Library. Well over one-hundred of Barry's friends and colleagues gathered at Millikan Pond that night to light candles in his memory. Those present included members of Barry's rugby club, members of Fleming House, staff and faculty members, and graduate and undergraduate students. Barry touched the entire Caltech community.

Barry's funeral will be held in New York. His surviving family members are Anita Harper, his father Reinhold Krueger, his mother and step-father Evelyn Krueger and Walter Kerrick, his two sisters Rita and Linda, and one grandmother. They ask that memorial contributions be sent payable to The Phi Delta Theta Educational Foundation in memory of Barry Robert Krueger, to The Phi Delta Theta Educational Foundation, 2 South Campus Avenue, Oxford, Ohio 45056.

Frosh Win Mudeo Easily

by Rob Ellis

This past Sunday at 1:00 p.m. marked the most recent chapter in the annual Mudeo. Freshmen and sophomores competed in a pit of muddy water to determine class supremacy for the upcoming year. From 1982 to 1988, the event did not take place, but it was reinstated last year, and the tradition seems to be continuing. Turnout was good, with about one hundred freshmen and sophomores and a few upperclassmen who all showed up for the barbecue beforehand. There was some objection by the Flems about shirts that certain Moles were wearing, but everyone settled down to finish lunch and start the game.

Both classes picked a ten man team for the tug of war, where the middle of the rope was placed directly above the mud pit. Everyone realized that most of the sophomores had come to eat and leave when they asked upperclassmen to help out. Despite formidable opponents, the freshman team, led on by cries of "Frosh are wimps!" proceeded to drag the sophomores through the mud. The frosh had a sure win from the start - the sophomores weren't able to phase them in the least.

For the next event, both sides gathered a team of five for a relay.

William Glenn and a Sophomore Rudd argue about which side of the pit the teams should be on for the horse and rider contest at Mudeo.

In the "Izzy Dizzy" bat race team members had to turn around a stationary bat ten times and then run through the mud pit twice. In what looked like a drunk's fifty yard dash, the freshmen just squeaked by the sophomores when the fifth team member threw an excellent block. The judge "didn't see anything," and the freshmen won the second event. Now the sophomores could only tie.

In the spirit of jousting, the horse and rider contest was the next event. After several minutes, the sophomores were able to find two people brave enough to face the freshmen. In a short chicken-fight, the sophomore rider was thrown into the mud. A large number of the sophomores were allegedly seen leaving at this time.

The final event saw the three remaining sophomores struggle to win the mud volleyball game. The freshmen kept tripping over each other, and almost lost. The final score was 16-14 in favor of the lower class, and the frosh completed their sweep of the afternoon's events. For only the third time in the history of the competition, the freshmen were victorious. To celebrate, the frosh grabbed the judge and dunked him in the pit. What a great idea, frosh!

CRIME AND INCIDENT BEAT

Crime tip: Easily portable, expensive items should not be left in view in either locked or unlocked rooms. Caltech is not well separated from the rest of the city!

- 10/23 A resident of Ricketts House suspects that someone has patched into his phone line and made $112.00 in phone calls between 1 and 2AM during the past month. The resident is usually in his room at this time.
- 10/23 Students were using the VCR and TV in the Braun House lounge until sometime after 2:30AM. At 7:00AM the custodial staff discovered the VCR was missing and the TV pulled away from the wall.
- 10/23 A student left his backpack in a study carrel in the Jorgensen Computing Center overnight, and found it missing when he returned. The pack contained several books, a calculator, and a pair of glasses.
- 10/25 A person who claimed she worked for Amtext but did not have a business card went into an office in Keck Lab and asked the occupant if he had any books for sale. Security advised the suspect that she would be arrested for trespassing if caught soliciting again on Caltech property.
- 10/26 A student of Page House left his door open overnight and discovered that his wallet containing $20.00 was missing from the top of his desk.
- 10/27 A member of the soccer club left his wallet, wrapped in a t-shirt, on the sideline while playing soccer. The wallet was discovered missing at half time; the victim also noticed a touch football game on the same field.
- 10/29 A man in his 20's tried to enter a residence on Catalina Avenue by opening the door. The occupant locked the dead bolt, but the man went to the kitchen window and stared at the occupant. Security was called, but the suspect could not be located.
- 10/30 A person reported that his wallet was missing from his office in Baxter. He states that he might have left it on his desk, but that the room is usually locked when the office is unattended.

Total value of stolen or missing items: $1154

Three Lovely Women? at Caltech

Vote Yes on Prop 130

To the Editors:

My father, who retired from a long career as a union carpenter, was shocked when he first saw a devastated clearcut in old-growth redwoods. He taught me to have reverence for the value of wood, and together we recycled several old buildings and gave them new lives. Though he has passed on now, I am sure that he would vote yes on Proposition 130, the Forests Forever Initiative if he could. I am working for passage of 130 because I want my children to have healthy environment and places to get away from the problems of the big city from time to time.

Like deforestation in the rainforests of Brazil, logging in the Pacific Northwest contributes to global environmental damage. If you are in favor of global warming then the timber industry's Proposition 138 is the initiative for you, because it locks in Big Timber's control over forest practices for at least another decade—time enough to cut down the last of the giants.

Lots of people here in Redwood Country give of their time trying to get the government to stop the damage to our forests, but they have the bully boys of Big Timber to contend with, and almost zero support from incumbent politicians.

Only the people speaking with a single unified and strong voice can send the message that needs to be sent to the politicians in Sacramento and Washington—vote YES on Proposition 130 and NO on Proposition 138!

Sincerely yours

ASCIT Halloween Party, 1990

by Dan Ko

If you were too busy studying, dating, watching TV, or just sleeping last Saturday night, you missed out on a rare opportunity to laugh at your fellow Techers making fool of themselves with weird costumes. There were Aimee Smith dressed up as the "Biker Bitch from hell" swinging a long, fake-leather whip, and Jack L. Prater as a pregnant lady, while a couple of Pageboys decided to be Greeks for the night and wrapped themselves in linens. Of course, as it is typical of most Halloween parties, especially Caltech Halloween parties, a number of people were dressed up as themselves, and some as others. The costume of this kind that fooled many people was that which Sheldon Lim wore to imitate Dan Ko. Incidentally, his date was the best-dressed transvestite of the night, Dan Ko.

Despite burdensome costumes and the muddy grass that was used as the dance floor, the rhythm of new wave hits and some funks got people moving on their feet. Nevertheless, there were numerous complaints that the party should have been held at Dabney Lounge. When an officer of ASCIT, which sponsored the party, was asked regarding this matter, she responded that those who were in charge making the reservation for the party, which has to be made in one-year advance, forgot to perform this duty. Although the Winnett Lounge could have served as a substitute, she thought the courtyard would provide a spookier atmosphere.

Admittedly, Caltech parties could always use some improvement, but last week's Halloween party still received quite a few favorable remarks, every one of which was phrased as "it was good for a Caltech party" or something to that effect. (I actually conducted a small survey.)

Debate: Should We Legalize Drugs?

by Golda Bernstein

To take, or not to take: that is NOT the question. To legalize, or not to legalize, that is the question. Whether tis better to let individuals screw themselves in the name of civil rights, or, by strict enforcement, to try to change them.

A DEBATE on this and related issues will be held tomorrow, from 2-4PM, in Baxter Lecture Hall. The Championing legalization are the American Civil Liberties Union, the Libertarian candidate for Attorney General of California, and a member of the Pasadena Council on Alcohol and Drug Abuse. On the other side, reps from the Community Youth Gang Services and a drug treatment center will argue that legalizing addictive drugs is the stupidest thing we could do.

Last, but certainly, absolutely, not least are the members of the audience, who are welcome, invited, and expected to actively participate. As soon as the speakers have had the chance to introduce themselves and their positions, and take a few first shots at each other, members of the audience will be allowed to enter the fray.

The central question and goal of the debate is not merely 'Should we legalize drugs, yes or no?' but 'How do we approach the drug problem?' Is heavier enforcement the answer? Stronger pressure on Columbian dealers? Anti-corruption measures and in-house anti-drug sweeps in suspect agencies? Or is decriminalization the way to reach users and break the hold of profiteering dealers? To what extent is drug use a 'victimless crime' deserving treatment but not punishment? What are the practical implications of legalization, the impact on society - would we become a nation of potheads??

Have another question? Come and ask it this Sat. - extend bull sessions beyond the corridors of your house. The debaters will bring a mix of perspectives to bear on this highly emotional and highly relevant issue. Please note the date, Nov. 3rd, is only 3 days before the November election. Outside reporters have been invited, and the major candidates for Atty General have expressed interest in the debate, and will be sent information on what is brought up. Legalization, once whispered softly in the hallways, has become, if not politically feasible, at least mentionable. Discussion, debate, is a predecessor to actual change.

Drugs are Big Business in America. Respectable segments of our society (including the government? Remember Iran-Contra...) as well as underground criminal elements profit off of drug users. Cocaine may be produced in Columbia, but the transportation and marketing, the paraphrenalia, possibly even some chemicals used in its original processing in Columbia - all come from American businesses. Some of them are legal, some not. The drug trade is probably the biggest unregulated business in the United States, and as such, probably the one leading to the most corruption.

Drug dealers regard police attempts to control the trade as a cost of operation, a sort of tax levied by the police. Police departments may depend on confiscating dealers' money stashes for part of their operating budget - and some police officers depend on skimming from such stashes as part of their personal budget. Would legalization end this sort of corruption?

Hypocrisy. Nancy Reagan wringing her hands in the White House, telling kids on the street who suddenly find that they make hundreds of dollars each night by dealing drugs to 'Just Say No.' True, the next night they may be dead. Also, many would-be dealers are used by the big suppliers and wind up with nothing. But where are the other options? Some kids do manage to get off the streets and get educations and jobs, but even Chief Filpot of the Pasadena Police will tell you, "We purely, simply, do not have alternatives for the disadvantaged underclass."

So what can we do? Rehabilitation programs, though abused and taken advantage of, are needed. Everyone seems to agree we need more and better rehabilitation programs. When an addict nearly OD's one night, and decides he's had enough, he doesn't need to wait a week or so with a monkey on his back before he can get treatment. Enforcement has its uses - Chief Filpot also can tell you of drug dealers who rehabilitated themselves, only because they were driven to it by repeated arrests by police. We have the stick - it's the carrot that seems to be missing.

Former drug dealers have proved to have aptitude as businessmen... is there a way to redirect them in the first place? What can be done? Someone should be asking... please come on Saturday. 2PM, Baxter Lecture Hall. See you there.

Frosh Parents Day

by Jason T. Lee
Freshman Parents' Day will be held tomorrow, Nov. 3 as the mothers and fathers of freshman will be given the opportunity to learn what Caltech is really like.
Of the 203 members of the freshman class, about 60 families will be attending (figure as of Monday). "But we usually get about 80 families in the end," said Suzette Cummings, program coordinator.
Planned activities will begin Saturday morning at 9:00 AM with registration and coffee outside 22 Gates. Most parents from out of town will have already been in Pasadena a few days, staying in places such as the Athenaeum, Holiday Inn & the Pasadena Hilton.
At 9:30, the parents will be welcomed by Andree Kraemer, President of the Caltech Service League. A panel discussion will follow, entitled "Life at Caltech."
"The information during the discussion will be geared specifically towards parents. The panel members will relate experiences, and share positive things," said Cummings.
On the panel are chairperson Barbara Green, Associate Dean of Students; Chris Brennan, Dean and Professor of ME, and Celina Mikolajczak & Eugene Lit, seniors.
After the panel discussion, parents will be allowed to engage in a question-and-answer period.
Lunch will be held at 11:45 at the Ath. Speaking after lunch will be Thomas Everhart, President of Caltech. Presentations by the Glee Clubs will also be made.
Guided tours of the campus will begin at 1:30. From there, parents can choose what they want to do.
David Levy, Director of Financial Aid, and Sally Asmundson, Director of Career Development, will give talks on their respective departments.

Caltech's entry in the 1991 Tournament of Roses Parade will be on display at 2:30. According to Cummings, the Rose Parade marks the beginning of Caltech's Centennial Celebration. The float's design team will be there to answer questions.
The bookstore will also be open Saturday with special hours, 1:30-3:30 pm.
Parents' Day will end at 4:00 pm. From there, parents can spend time with their student. Of interest is a grandfather of a frosh who will be attending as a relative and an alumni—class of 1923. There will also be an attending father from the class of 1967.
Throughout the day, parents will also get to see Caltech sports in action. Water polo, fencing and football will all be going on.
"Overall, there's lots to see and do at this one-day event, we have lots of talks, tours and faculty will be around to meet the parents," said Cummings.

Eduardo Grado Leads 4SP Program

by Shane Sauby

Have you heard of Eduardo Grado? Does the name sound familiar for some reason? Well, maybe then you have already met the man who has replaced Lee Browne in the Secondary School Relations office.

Eduardo Grados, "Eddie" to almost everyone, is another fine representative from M.I.T. who has come out to the west coast to work for Caltech. He is now in charge of the Secondary School Relations and Student Affirmative Action Program. If the name sounds funny, its because he's already changed it. Eduardo has come her from a strong background and wants to make even stronger impressions on the student body.

First, a little history though. Eduardo Grado is a Mexican-American who worked his way through school at M.I.T. After graduating he went to work for the school and eventually achieved the position of head of minority recruitment and Assistant Director of Admissions. This basically put him on the road fifteen to twenty weeks out of the year, travelling to meet prospective students and spreading the word about M.I.T. He was then offered the position here at Caltech and left M.I.T. to work here.

Eduardo thinks there are some things that need to be changed and that is why he accepted the offer. He sees the present enrollment at Caltech many years behind the rest of the country and he worries about the possible lack of engineers in the near future. He applauds the present programs that have recently been employed to get more minority and women students.

He also has some plans for his new home. Eduardo would like to involve minority students more in national organizations by establishing chapters at Caltech. He would also like to follow the progress of minority and female freshmen to make sure they are getting all the help that they need. He wants to become involved in with the undergrads and help them with their relationship with the administration. When asked about the usefulness of some programs he commented that "What's best for minority students is best for everyone else." He found that the programs and policies he helped form at M.I.T. for minority students worked well for other students as well.

Another problem Eduardo sees is the social isolation of Caltech. He notes how the students seldom have events that involve other schools, especially when there are so many schools in the area. He wants to work on relationships not only with local high schools, but other colleges as well.

An important part of Eduardo's new job is he is in charge of the SSP, SSSP, and SSSSP programs

(The first is for entering freshmen, the second for high school students during the academic year, and the third is the summer program.) He plans some big changes in all of these programs. The biggest change will be from taking anyone who wishes to be in the program, to accepting simple applications from only 8th and 9th graders. He will also push for more minority student enrollment, especially from the local area schools. The courses will also be changed, from the six levels of Physics and three levels of Biology and Chemistry, to more introductory science courses and math classes. He also wishes to introduce some physical education classes and possibly even field trips. Unfortunately, this will shift the student involvement from the classroom to more counselors in the houses, who will be needed to look over the younger students more carefully. Overall, Eduardo has some big plans for everyone.

Eddie wants to be friends with the undergraduates. He really wants to help and get involved. He has already picked up on a couple of the problems the undergrads are having, but it is a skewed viewpoint. He has met many frosh, but not many upperclassmen, so some of the problems he has heard of may be long forgotten by most upperclassmen. Eduardo likes to ask questions though and he listens well. He will find out what he wants to know and do what he can to help, especially if the undergrads make him feel welcome here.

Although no blue flash was reported at the pumpkin drop Wednesday night, most who attended weren't too disappointed.

When we started organizing this debate, we asked everyone for a written statement of their positions.

Paul Gautreau, candidate for Atty Gen: I, like most Californians, demand to be safe at home and on the streets. I would like all Californians to be healthy and free of drug dependency. But, laws which criminalize drug use simply do not help; in fact, they just make things worse. . . . While no one denies the high cost of drug abuse, more and more the experts are agreeing that the "war on drugs" can never be won.

If legalized, drugs would be considerably less expensive on the open market that they are on the black market. With the price of the market declining dramatically, the opportunity for huge profits would be negligible. . . . Drug users and addicts could support their habits with honest work rather than the commission of crimes such as robbery, burglary, and theft. Moreover, the Government could control the purity and marketing of drugs which would proscribe the sale of adulterated drugs that have caused injury and death. The provision of sterile, safe paraphernalia to drug users would be a way of preventing the spread social diseases such as AIDS.

. . . In short, individuals ought to have the right to decide for themselves what to put in their own bodies, so long as they take responsibility for their actions.

Late Night Dining

by Larry, Rog and John

Okay, this is the first of a weekly Tech column reviewing late-night restaurants in the far and local Pasadena area. Yours truly are Larry Cheng, Jonathan Liljeblad, and Roger Tang whenever he stops moaning and mumbling "WORK! WORK! AAAH!" Anyway, we intend to present what there is of our munificently bounteous talents in the high-end upscale haute couture and polished cuisine scene, with all the dedication and persistence absolutely positively necessary to bring the total, complete, and unobstructed truth to you about the unlimited possibilities for dining within the greater area...

Tag team.

LC: Indeed, every nuance of this description of us is the truth, as anyone who knows us personally will attest to. Anyway, our first stop in this week's incredible edible journey was Big Mama's, Southern and Cajun food like no other's. Alas, the place was closed.

JNL: Yeah, the crap-joint was closed, which left us going for either the Taco Truck or some random place. We consulted our food-o-meters, checked our watches, vaulted for the Taco Truck, and found it gone. Which left us with Some Random Place. But oh, for our feminine companions, who promptly pointed out a place to whet our palates at the place that is Tiffany's, located at 48 S. Fair Oaks, right across from the Rose City Diner. We love Celia, Nancy and Chandra.

LC: Yes, some of us some of them more than others, if that makes any sense. So, here we are at Tiffany's, an upscale Denny's kind of decor, pink and salmon comfy-seats, wood tables, a hint of metal fixtures, etc. From the outside, this place looks a lot like RCD (we suave types call it that) across the street, but don't be fooled—inside there's none of that sappy nostalgia business.

JNL: So we strolled in, debonair we declare like old Fred Astaire. The waitress just about died when she saw us, but that was because it was 11:45 and closing was at 12:00. Nevertheless, we got seats and were promptly served. Mauve and lavender and mustard...like something from a Tweed's catalog, except with huge windows opening out to the street. I ordered Gyros ($4.95), which came served with a salad, fries, and pita bread. And oh yeah, all of it on styrofoam.

LC: This place definitely had a Greek twist to it. I had the Lamb Souvlaki ($3.50), a pita sandwich with salad included. Tasted pretty good, that Souvlaki. Lots of lamb bits and veggie bits and a little cup of that tasteless white sauce. The stuff was so darn juicy the pita fell apart! No big deal, tho. I also stole some of Celia's Showerma combo plate ($4.95) with all the fries, etc. Very tasty, well done meat. Yum. I personally liked the Showerma better than my lamb stuff.

JNL: I grilled the waitress who, while politely pointing out the proximity to closing time also managed to tell me that the establishment was intended as a nouvelle 90s-conscious yuppie ethnic diner aimed at the burgeoning yuppie-wanna-bes prowling the intestinal intertwining network of a labyrinth that is our Olde Towne Pasadena. I found the food tasty, strong, and able, all very much accentuated and enhanced by the refined simplistic glow of the ambient, subtly late-night sophisticated atmosphere. Ya know? Ummm...

LC: Ummmm. Very Yuppie. Sorta Diner-esque. Even a bit ethnic, with all that Greek kinda food. Well the good news is that this is a definite step up from, say, Taco Bell. Good tasty food in a pleasant pastel atmosphere. The not-so-good: my sandwich came served in one of Gary H's dinner roll baskets—shudder. The ugly: those pictures on the wall had no theme at all, none.

JNL: Oh boy. It was a Paul Prudhomme on amphetamines there for a split second. Anyway, I thought it was good cheap Greek food perfect for something different but still in a clean oh so I mean incredibly clean atmosphere. For the troops, the critical Intelligence is: opens at 0600, closes at 0000 hours. For those egg-eaters, Breakfast at Tiffany's is 0600 to 2300 hours. Good stuff—no finger on this one. Anything to add, Larry?

LC: You've just about said it all! Well, until next week, chew well before swallowing, don't slurp, and keep that pinky in the air!

Quigley Down Under

by Shane Sauby

Okay, how many people saw "Silverado"? How many people liked "Silverado"? Well, for those of you who remember, "Silverado" was a western. Everyone say it now, western. Some may not have ever seen John Wayne swagger down main street, or even Clint Eastwood squint at the bad guy, but now is your chance to see a real western. "Quigley Down Under" is a western, set in the right time period, but on a different continent.

Tom Selleck plays Matthew Quigley, one of the best, if not THE best, long distance sharpshooters in the world. He answers a want ad from Marston Waters, a ranch in Australia, for a marksman. Upon arrival, he immediately battle the men sent to pick him up and is purposely mistaken for "Roy" by Crazy Cora (Laura San Giacomo) who is being terrorized by them.

The three men recognize Quigley's name when he refutes the identity of Roy, thus the battle ends and the war begins. Quigley is taken to the ranch, which is about the size of Rhode Island, and meets his new boss. Alan Rickman is Marston, a sly Australian rancher who is having problems with the local aborigines. Since they have learned to stay out of rifle fire, he wants Quigley to help dispose of them. Quigley answers by throwing Masterson through the front door.

This is a fine western. It has a good guy, Quigley. It has a bad guy, Masterson, with a bunch of little henchmen for cannon fodder. It sort of has a woman, Crazy Cora, and it has some of the best scenery around since it was filmed in Australia. There is very little new to this movie other than its location. This leads to the only problem with it and that is that it is a little predictable. The ending could be seen from about the halfway point and the few plot twists were more like plot bends. This did not, however, lower my appreciation. I found this movie entertaining and fun. If you like westerns, old or new, this is the film for you. (No top five, there are about ten films I haven't seen.)

Sci-Fi Book Review

by Nick Smith

Another Day, Another Dungeon by Greg Costikyan TOR paperback, $3.95

Billed as book one of a series entitled Cups and Sorcery, this novel takes place in a world of Dungeons and Dragons characters, more or less. Unlike most books of this type, it isn't about godlike referees gone powermad, or a heavily game oriented book where characters realize they are in someone else's adventure. It's just a fantasy novel with a "game" feel to it, including a lot of inside jokes recognizable to anyone who has ever played any fantasy game.

As an example, one of the characters is equipping for an expedition into the nearest dangerous cavern. He attempts to carry one of everything one might need in an emergency, including an eleven foot pole (in sections that fit together). Why eleven foot? In case they run into a trap that is planned for someone using a ten foot pole! Every gamer knows that, right?

The book comes complete with a cast of characters, and two small maps (no continent-spanning epic this—the whole thing takes place in one city and a nearby cavern). One of the maps is a detailed drawing of one of the silliest battles in fantasy history, and explaining how not to use a basilisk in battle.

The book manages to parody all sorts of things, from high fantasy to sword-slinging barbarians, from elves to city-bred thieves, from necromancers to fraternities. Fraternities? Yes, like the Elks, but with magic. And let's not forget the Grand Duke's vile dungeon, which is filled with...mushrooms. Hey, the guy's a gourmet, and prisoners require a lot of upkeep.

Another Day, Another Dungeon is not a great work of enduring literature, but it's fun, especially if you are familiar with the cliches of fantasy novels and/or fantasy games.

Obscure Party Candidates

by Chris Dunn

Gubernatorial candidates of minor political parties have received scant attention in the media. When Maria Munoz of Peace and Freedom received an important endorsement, not a word was aired or printed. "Three TV stations and several newspapers showed up, but the next day there was nothing," said Munoz.

The California Tech continues its maverick reporting with these summaries of interviews shown on PBS:

Jerome McCready — American Independent.

A few issues prompted him to seek office; abortion, the death penalty, and insurance were mentioned. He opposes abortion, supports speedy capital punishment, and regrets the lax execution of the insurance laws mandated by voters in the last general election.

He opposes Proposition 131 (term limitations) and supports Proposition 140 (stricter limitations). After being Governor for two terms, he would abide by Proposition 140, returning to "bigger and better things." He considers citizenship to be "bigger and better" than governing the state, a view consistent with his substantially anti-government stand.

Requiring billions of dollars and many years to unravel, the "unbelievable number of initiatives" reflects, in his opinion, the "extremely stupid" method that apathetic voters have chosen to regain control over their state.

Maria Munoz — Peace and Freedom.

Representing a party she calls "pro-socialist" and "pro-feminist", she supports reproductive choice for women, affordable housing for the poor, and a health care plan for the nation. She wants higher taxes on the rich.

She refused to state a position on California water rights, saying only that she would appoint a commission of experts from outside the Republican and Democratic parties to resolve the issue.

Of the five gubernatorial candidates, only she opposes the death penalty.

Dennis Thompson — Libertarian.

With degrees in electrical engineering and business administration, experience within the bureaucracy of a large corporation, and leadership as the president of a computer software firm, he considers himself highly qualified to govern California.

He deplores the current school system and advocates tax credits for education.

He believes that drugs should be legalized (see the debate at Beckman Auditorium on Saturday for more on that) and wants to restrict crime through restitution instead of through retribution. Private enterprise should contract freely with inmates, and prisoners should be forced to pay their way, says he.

Tax credit are his preferred means of shrinking the budget.

In the interest of fairness, here are the other candidates:

Pete Wilson — Republican.
Diane Feinstein — Democratic.

 What I really want to know is who in the hell was that girl dressed up like the MOSH with a can fetish at the Halloween Party? Rumour has it that it was Golda, but I didn't see any dogs tied up nearby, so it's unclear to me. On the same subject, what the hell happened to costumes? It WAS a costume party after all. Can this be the same school that brought us such classics as the generic six-pack of beer and the pocket protector? Get on the ball! Maybe its a good thing there's no Interhouse this year, chances are it would be lame with ideas like the ones I saw. At least the rest of the party was passable. There was even a lack of the scourge of circle dancing. Definite thumbs up there. One more question. Why did all the Lloyd women dress up as sluts? I'm trying to come up with some conclusion, but then again, I'm afraid to. Fantasy or reality? Take your pick guys. Honorable mention has to go to Karin, she confused the hell out of everyone with the George Winston album. Those in the know, know.

I got a lot of questions about what exactly Isaac Newton, seven beavers and a time machine have in common. The answer is: THEY HAVE ABSOLUTELY NOTHING IN COMMON. Remember that when thinking of your favorite New Year's RF. No one seemed to care why Jack Prater and Dave Geraghty both hold their crotches, so fuck it. Then, again, maybe that's why they do it. Jack's drawer o' protection is rather dusty . . .

Other fun and interesting goings on. Well, fun. Well, maybe not. Anyway, the Senior Sport Challenge has finally been answered; by the sophmores in volleyball, but they seem reluctant to play. Could that be because they will be ground into the turf like the putrid, slimy, scum of the earth that they are? Could be, could be. The seniors are awaiting the next acceptance, whenever and wherever it may appear. All I can say is the underclassmen should go and kiss the feet of Dabney for showing up at the softball game. Then again, I wouldn't wish kissing the feet of Dabney on anyone, even the underwimps.

The wimpiest of all have got to be the frosh. Although none were barbequed, perhaps that would have been a more merciful ending. It took a whole hour for the upperclassmen and women to dominate capture the flag. One hour? Too lame to even talk about. Alex Densmore ranks right up there in lameness, though. The hot tub is late!!! He's got some lame excuse about the Purchasing Dept. or something. Alex, after the way Nancy C. has bowed to your manhood, I thought great things were in store. Alas, alack, (tm 1989, Fiona Lo) we are doomed to mediocrity.

One more thing: Goodbye Barry.

Blacker
 Okay, here it is . . . two weeks in a row of Blacker I.W.'s. By two guys who shouldn't be writing them. Let the games commence!

Batter UP!! First of all, the frosh. Alright, so you pulled a prank on me. So you made my room into a beach. But where was the seagull? And the Ice Cream truck? Next time you pull a prank like this, at least get me some babes in bikinis - OK? Next up, Housing. What is the problem with this pet policy? IHC makes a ban. Ok. IHC tries to lift the ban and nono, no can do guys, not your power. Look, we have an IHC, let them do something.

So, has anybody gotten hit with a water balloon by the coke machine yet?? NO? You're not being harsh enough. The Cannes Committee on the Escalation of Water Violence has supplied these tools for a reason. Use them. "They'll never know what hit them."

. . . And LO, the waiters took only three days to respond to the accusations of lameness, and it was GOOD. I just knew Ian was hiding a butterpat under his plate . . . and I suspect he's not the only one, either. Talking about dinner, when was the last time you saw freshmen shower an upperclassman for his birthday??? And don't you frosh wonder what a "Six man lift" is?? (Ask at dinner)

And LO again . . . It seems that the frosh are not totally, irretrievably lame, as they did not heed the subliminal message in the last Inside World, and thought of an original reply to our top ten list (The other explanation, of course, is that they were SO clueless that they didn't get it). Now I know why Fru was so brave writing the Inside World last week . . . he didn't plan to be around on Friday! By the way frosh, in case this week's Inside World gives you any more ideas . . . I'll be in San Diego taking my midterms. I hear they got some pretty cool showers, fountains, ponds . . .

And now for this week's TOP 10 list: -Top 10 Geeky things that techers do-
 10. The use of the terms "trivial" and "orders of magnitude"
 i.e. "The frosh class is orders of magnitude more wimpy than last year's frosh class. The proof is trivial."
 9. Get cues from popular magazines as to the "in" words used to describe themselves (I'm talkin' to YOU, you Page House "gookers").

8. Running around bitching about how you're gonna fail a P/F class that no one has failed in the history of the school. This applies to you frosh!

7. Doing your homework more than two days before it is due, unless you will spend the next two days someplace like Hawaii. (Hey, wait a minute, maybe that's a good idea . . .)

6. Spend their time in the coffeehouse discussing the latest trends in computer technology. +2 bonus points if they are arguing over it.

5. Decide that they DON'T really want to go to a College Party that was beyond anything they will EVER see at Tech (especially with "new & improved" Interhouse next term). And you people know who you are!

4. Decide that they Don't . . . blah blah #5 . . . because they are behind on their Pass/Something work.

3. Become a Phys/Math major. (Do we have any of those? Where???)

2. Waiting to be challenged before showering or ponding an upperclassman. (This may or may not be a challenge, depending on which one will keep Pete clean . . .)

And the one you've all been waiting for . . .

1. Making top 10 lists on the Geeky things we all do and Love. (OOH, they're so harsh they even cut themselves down! Ouch!)

And last on today's Inside World is Walker's Corner: (Warning: Walker isn't here so we'll try and do without him) OOH, Bitterness. Don't Call me dude. Go see Heavy Metal. OOH, OOH . . . Hollywood. Give 'im the beak. Gamers suck. OOH, I am so bitter. I am not Noam dammit. You all suck. Beak rules.

Thanks, Walker, for stopping in. (Don't you all wonder if this whole "beaked axe" business is a Fruedian thing?)

Random Comments Section -
 Dave, DON'T FLAME!! You'll only take down your Most Illustrious V.P. with you! It would be a bad thing.

To all the guys that judged the Hell-HOM alley challenge- Ben (Yeeeahh, Boyee!!), Bappa, Bill, John, Wally, Carlos, Pablo - Peace. And thanks a lot for doing it. (You guys really didn't want those twenty bucks did you???)

Pete had NO part of the frosh-harshing in this issue. Well, Ok, he did, but his clothes are still slimy from last week . . . and I washed them once already.

P.S. If after two weeks we still haven't harshed on you then consider yourself lucky. Also, if you missed your chance to jump off of Cliff, don't worry, I'll be going down there often, so will Hoyt and you can still do it. Next week, something completely different. A nice Inside World. It will be so nice, it will make you puke and then we can harsh on you for puking.

Rome
 It is Friday, June 21, 1967. A young corporate executive is sitting at his desk on the fourth floor of a 13 story office building. He is busily preparing a report for an upcoming meeting. Suddenly, he stops. Mid paragraph, mid sentence, mid thought, he stops. He clutches his throbbing temples and falls to his knees. His hands tremble, his mind races, his throat tightens. His vocal chords are tense and frighteningly unfamiliar. A current of absolute and unimagined pain arcs across his body. His eyes whirl wildly in their sockets, his teeth bleed, and his skin begins to pop and peel. His lungs ignite, his muscles tear, his chest vibrates. He frantically claws at his face, rips at his tongue, and tries desperately to suppress that which no man can suppress. His broken body writhes uncontrollably, his heart surges, and his bloody lips hopelessly struggle against the unspeakable. His frontal lobe hemorrhages and explodes, and amidst the silence of an inner scream his lifeless mouth whispers . . . ROME.

Rome has thoughtfully, considerately, and without interference allowed the "shakespeares" of Blacker House to publish their own beautifully crafted Inside Worlds. Rome has tolerantly and patiently endured the verbal vomit of a number of would-be poets, and though it thoroughly enjoys the despondent driver of the cleverly cryptic Mr. Beak, Rome grows weary of its weekly wading through a sea of printed putridity. It is for this reason, and this reason alone, that Rome has chosen once again to speak.

Ruddock

Like sands through the hourglass, so are the days in Ruddock House. Things move about as slow as they do on a soap opera, and the people are just as melodramatic. If any of you haven't figured out yet why this campus died last weekend, it 'cause anyone with any common sense went to Santa Barbara. Fifteen Thousand screaming college students all looking for a little piece of the action.

We took the liberty of interviewing some of the locals up there, and we came up with some interesting results.

Interviewer: Can we have a dozen of those Chocolate Chip cookies?

Employee: Hey! Wait a sec! You're not drunk. How do you expect to get [expletive deleted] if you're not drunk?

Interviewer: Well, look who's working in the cookie store on a Saturday night!

Interviewer: So what are you studying in San Diego?

Girl with lots of make-up: I'm studying to be a fashion consultant. Like, I want to be a buyer.

Interviewer: So you're a shopping major?

Girl: No. I'm a buyer. Shopping majors have fewer requirements.

Some chick: I hate Santa Barbara. Everyone here is SO SHALLOW! All of these mindless imbeciles getting drunk. How come there's no one with any depth?

Interviewer: Shut up!

If large groups of people just aren't your cup of tea, then you might find wall jousting a more interesting alternative. Just grab a couple of pillows. There's always someone to joust with, especially since Dave loves to call Alley meetings on Friday nights. As a matter of fact, if you live in Alley 3, your night has probably already been planned. Or you can just go to Hollywood and dress up in black clothing and eye make-up. You'll feel right at home with the Death Rock Dollies at Helter Skelter. And if you can't dance, don't worry! Nobody will know the difference. Just be careful about making friends, since these trendy night creatures tend to cross-dress. Not that you'd find anyone here doing such a thing (sorry Chris). Rating: One thumb up Shane's ass.

Anyhow, I was sitting around Friday night reflecting on the meaning of life, like I always do when it looks like I'm going to fail all my classes. Things had gotten so damn dull that people who had spent all week working at Caltech were spending their Friday night watching a movie about Caltech. I had to go down to my favorite Hollywood nihilistic trout dancing gothic death rock club, Helter Skelter, and relax. You see, the music is so loud and so bad, it actually prevents coherent thought. I was just sitting there, watching the zombie dancing, listening to the music, and thinking about how it was all about the downfall of me and the rest of Ruddock House. Matt Durasoff is out there doing some Twin Peaks dwarf-dancing with the Bride of Frankenstein and a bunch of other depressed poet-types. And right as the music reaches its height of melancholy, the Bride stretches out her foot and kicks Matt right in the groceries. And as he collapsed in a heap on the dance floor, it came to me: Santa Barbara! Pasadena was so darn boring, it was time to make a pilgrimage to the holy land of Santa Barbara and find a prophet to tell me why Ruddock House was so dull.

So we fired up the Red Rhino Party Van and set out for Santa Barbara on Saturday. Coincidentally, this was the weekend before Halloween, so there were about a billion screaming college kids in Isla Vista also searching for the meaning of life. Or a babe and a beer, same difference. So out of these billion people, I had to find the one, true prophet who could explain life to me. No biggie. First stop was Larry and Scott's apartment, where we found some future candidates for the White Boy's Club playing wiffle ball and drinking beer. Scott wasn't home, and all Larry could tell me was, "Better move that van, or it'll get towed." Now this said a lot about the security buttheads at Caltech, but not much about life or Ruddock House. So next we went to Matt Giger and Duppy's house. Matt has been known to say a few wise things in his time, like "Who the fuck are you! Why are you so obscure!" But tonight all he could offer was, "I hate it here. I wanna go home." Come to think of it, that says a lot about Caltech, too. So the next best place to look for a prophet was out on DP, the strip, the place where a billion students get together for a giant block party. I walked up and down for a while, looking for a sign or an omen or a beer. But all I got was a lot of girls in bunny suits and lampshades giggling at the cops. Then suddenly I saw a vision through the fog. A figure standing at the edge of the cliff over the ocean. The other people around the cliff were staring at him, too. Was this the prophet? Had he come to speak to me? Nope, it was just Chris Launey, and he had gone to the cliff to take a whiz. Is this a new purity point?

Next thing I did was to dress up like a fat Middle Eastern woman with Delwyn and go to a party. Is this a new purity point? I was sitting around trying to get in touch with my inner self with the help of some spiced wine, when the girl next to me says, "Maks ne uttur Shechoh!" This was the one! The prophet talking to me! Speaking to me in tongues about me and life and the future of Ruddock House! So I said, "what?" And she said, "Pass me another Cheeto." So I said, "Oh." "I hate the people here," she said "everyone is so shallow!" This was it! What I had come to learn. Santa Barbara is a lot of fun because nobody gives a darn. You can dress like a chicken and try to hatch police cars, or you can just skank till you fall asleep in your neighbor's bushes. So lighten up Ruddock House! That's straight from God, to a girl with a mouthful of Cheetos, to me, to you. So I fired up the Red Rhino Party Van and came back to Caltech with a little more happiness, a little more understanding, and a glow in the dark T-shirt to commemorate the experience.

WELCOME PARENTS,
We hope you are enjoying parents weekend. As a service to you, we will tell you the truth about Caltech. From now on, do not trust your son or daughter, trust us. We never lie. We will do our best to dispell the common rumors about Tech life.

Rumor 1: Sex does not exist at Caltech.

The Truth: Techers bang like crazed weasels. In fact, the administration is so concerned about your daughter getting pregnant, they give out free condoms.

Now that leads us to this weeks top five list.

TOP FIVE PLACES TO GET CONDOMS

5. Your roommate. Except he/she is most likely to be out of them. Plan ahead frosh.
4. The Pantry on Lake and California. They have the latest styles but it is a long run.
3. Laundry Room in the SAC. One of the free dispensors on campus, but they are always out. Check on Mondays.
2. The Health Center. Again, they are free and include instructions. However, only open during business hours.
1. MOSH's Office. Located right across Elizabeth's desk, they are tastefully arranged in a bowl. For the discrete, they come sorted in an envelope.

This brings us to the top THREE ways to get MOSH's condoms.

3. Wait till no one is watching, grab and run.
2. Look at sports day pictures on wall, then quietly take some.
1. Tell Elizabeth, "They're not for me, they're for Paul San Clemente."

Rumor 2: Techers have a heavy course load.

The Truth: That's a lie.

Rumor 3: Caltech has boring parties.

The Truth: You should have been at the 317 party last week. You would never believe how thirsty the frosh are. There were even half naked people waking up in the bushes the next day.

Rumor 4: Caltech is a good school.

The Truth: NOT. (Wayne's world, Wayne's world.)

CARLOS' GUIDE TO A BETTER YOU

Due to the extreme nature of Carlos' Guide, we will postpone it until next week.

Finally, Winners of the Week

Lost Frosh: Matt Derer

Lame Comebacks of the Week: Danny H-L

Worst Dinner Announcements: Stu

Biggest Cynic: Erich 'Don't sign the petition.' Schneider

Most Upset when Dissed: Erich

Most Glommed Frosh: just guess.

Best Tie-Died Socks: Gonzo

Till next week,

-Meeb and the Dweeb

The Inside World

Fleming

I've been here a few weeks now, and I'm sick and fucking tired of not reading a Fleming inside world, so I'm writing one myself. Being a frosh, I can only figure that our upperclassmen are too LAME to write their own. That reminds me of a near famous poem written by alley two's Poet Laureate, Ned "cube-head, sprinklerhead, wethead" Bowden:

Roses are red,
Violets are blue,
If an upperclassman wants a shower,
He can come to alley two.

(For you upperclassmen who are a bit slow, read CHALLENGE!)

But seriously, here's what I think of my new home.

Top 7 things I like about my house (in no particular order):

1. Throwing napkins.
2. "INGRID" yelled at about 120db.
3. My "quite a few" housemates. (nice specific number of Flem)
4. The original names of our alleys.
5. My room (#12) is in alley six.
6. We tend to wear shoes a lot.
7. The maid does my dishes.

My favorite quotes since I've been here:

1. "But, I'm not wet."-anonymous frosh author
2. "But, it's not fair!"-the fucking Chem1 Darb ombudsman.
3. "There's 38 columns in the Ath! 38 columns!"-disgruntled JD treasure hunt competitor.

4. "The salt does not significantly lower the temperature."-007
5. "FUCK DAPAC!"-impossible to give credit to a single individual.
6. "Bill Swanson is a toad."-Alley two (who?)
7. "...made them bleed, which just goes to prove everybody is a Flem on the inside!"-the CLAW

My least favorite quotes:

(TIE)

- a) "It's only Pass/Fail, Frosh!"-every upperclassman.
- b) "It's intuitively obvious."-some BIG FUCKING DICKHEAD in Math.

Messages:

to Blacker-come to lunch anytime. The kitchen door was an unfortunate bit of luck, wasn't it. And remember, IN EVERY SOCIETY, there can only be one INFINITELY BITCHIN' house. Not to say there aren't many FINE houses.

also to Blacker-(and I really mean this) You guys are really good sportsmen and I enjoyed playing ultimate with nice people for a change.

to CLAGS: I didn't want to come to your butt fucking party.

to Mike Wong: pick a real house, but not one that SUCKS.

Other things:

I never knew that operating a fifty tone crane could be so simple. I really liked Julian's Journal in last week's Tech. I wonder if Caltech computers type the word "fuck" more often than other computers? Bring back Interhouse. I want to go bungee cord jumping as a second term social event, but nobody listens. I'm glad rotation is over, and wish they'd FIND SOMETHING BETTER!! (Hi Randy!)

Note home:

Dabney

There's celebrating going on in Dabney because we just recieved our new RAs. And, in honor of their arrival I am dedicating this week's inside world to help them in their transition from normal life to living in Dabney. But before I begin to give the crucial do's and don't of living in this great green ship of men, I have a few general observations. First, I would like to put the editors at ease concerning their Inside World policy. Fellas, you need not fret your little heads about printing slander, it's just not a problem. Reason being that because the inside world is in print, it's LIABLE, not slander. Hello... McFly, (knock, knock) is there anybody home? With that out of the way we begin the guide to Dabney. First off, although I know the RAs won't need this advice (I hope), I think the frosh (a certain couple in particular) might learn a little something from my list of...

Where To Make Out In Dabney

1. Not on the lounge couch in front of the fire. I realize the fire is romantic but just take a picture and go somewhere else. Besides, I keep finding Graham crackers on the couch these days.
2. Not in front of your glom. I'm not to concerned about hurt feelings but people seem to have this habit of hurting people and possessions when they're involved in scenes like this. So play it safe and get some privacy.
3. Not while your roommate watches. I know how it stinks not to have a room of your own, but your roommate needs sleep too.
4. Find a single with thick walls. For verification of the prudence of this maneuver, simply talk to the louder and funnier house members of the past.

Now I hope that clears up some misconceptions. Speaking of which, don't be deceived, it's not a pamphlet, it's not just a fancy picture of a tear, it is the Dabney Houselist. I would say that this term's houselist goes on my "extremely light reading" list. It has comically been dubbed, not a houselist, but a MinimalList. Get it, a minimalist! Oh, I love those nutty pun jokes.

I'll warn the RAs ahead of time that if they are good in any sports in any capacity they need to watch out for Dabney's Ath Man. If it turns out that you have some talent at a sport, and you end up playing for Dabney in Interhouse, he very well might build a shrine to your existance in appreciation. Then again, maybe the frosh will realize how much fun it is to play sports for Dabney.

Oh, and if you're ever walking past room fifteen and you hear the giggling of pretty young women coming from behind the door, don't worry, just wake up because you're dreaming. Nothing like that goes on in that room.

Also if you easily offended I think it might be wise to steer clear of the alley two computer room. I heard reports that a group of frosh have been playing RISK there, discussing the possible Minierol deposits that exist in the countries they are conquering and swearing profusely. I hear that their main topic of disscussion is men who are "butt buddies" and throwing these kinds of insults at each other. Either these fellas are fascinated by the idea or there is real game of "risk" going on in their rooms.

That about wraps it up for the guide to life in Dabney, I hope you can find your way without too many problems. And finally, I have a special announcement. The winner of the sensitivity award this week goes out to Page House. Page, you've certainly proven to everyone that you're not a bunch of uptight fellas by your rsonpce to last week's commentary on the CLAGS party last week. By not just making fun of CLAGS, but rather degrading the entire homosexual community, you clearly demonstrated to me that you are well on your way to becoming a bunch of open minded young men. I'll be looking forward to future issues of the Page Inside World for when you make fun of minorities and the handicapped. I guess this is leaving me open for rude comments concerning my sexual ability next week, but oh, well. Page Boys, I love ya. And I'll see everybody next week, but in the meantime, stay hip.

Inside World Policy:

All Inside Worlds must include the author's name. Inside worlds can only be written by current undergraduates. The editors reserve the right to edit any or all parts of an Inside World, or to not print it at all. No libelous material will be accepted. It is the author's responsibility to check material written about a person to see if they consider it libelous.

The Inside World

Ricketts2

Now for that column you've all been waiting for, yes its "Ask Gonzo." Here is this week's letter:

Dear Gonzo,
I am considering sending George Bush two slices o' toast. What bread should I use? White bread - a holdover from Reaganamerica, Sourdough - the San Francisco yuppie bread, or ten grain - a more true representation of the diverse cultures of this great land?

A minion o' the Toast Fairy
Dear Minion o' Toast,
Clearly this is a serious matter, and should be given proper consideration. I have thought long and hard on your dilemma, and while relaxing on the John the other day, a solution plopped into my mind. You should send him burnt plastic fruit bread, the kind you get for Christmas every year and then send to someone else. This will truly represent the heart and soul of our beloved leader.

Letters and questions may be mailed to Gonzo, 1-59. Please do not include your name, as I have absolutely no respect for privacy whatsoever. Candid nude photos will be much appreciated.

Now for our regularly scheduled program. Ode to the physics messiah: zero. House average score this week: 1.3 (weak, which it has been since Drew and Kathleen left. This weeks score is almost entirely due to Bernie and Bernie's girlfriend who independently scored 9.6) This week sucked. Last week sucked. Next week will surely also suck. Prohibition has worked its magic, and hence nothing ever happens. Another weekend passed with no party, no alcohol, no fun, no pictures, and no people jumping out of windows to escape. What next? Maybe we can all gather in the courtyard and stare at each other. Especially our feet. But of course all the previous inside worlds sucked immesurably. Well clearly Alex and Amoeba have been too busy with each other to think of anything good to write. Number nine, Number nine, Number nine, And they're off... Rob Hanna failed to throw himself off Millikan and satisfy an angry mob. For steve farris: Rob Hanna es muy stupido, Rob wa dork desu, Rob ist ein dummkopf, Rob is just plain lame. He can't even tell Julius from Julian. 700 lbs. and ugly as sin, in sin. Too gross, worse than the dice man himself, if possible. Get laid already guys, or at least get better sex toys. and next time clean up your fucking mess when your "finished" The horses are on the track... Clearly Lynell needs to get laid almost as much as Bogie. Almost. (a secret message has been encoded in this inside world, the first person to find it will feel exceptionally stupid.) Yes, it is now time for yours and mine favorite section: This week is officially poke Danny in the ribs week. Also, have you asked Johanna if her sister is coming to visit? If not, there is still time. Rude and Slander Corner: (we don't just print the truth, we make it up.) These week we find Nathan sneaking out of Leah's room late at night. What can this mean? Guitar lessons? Hardly I think. If that's not enough, during the same night this reporter saw Leah sneaking out of Plu's room. Wierder and wierder. And to top matters off, during, yes the same night, plu was seen sneaking out of Hoskins Sr. room. Where was trisy? What can it all mean? This reporter would like to know. Helen: Hubba Hubba, Woo Woo. 'nough said. Erika, though not seen eating or sleeping, was caught guzzling straight everclear in her closet. What was this reporter doing in her closet? Looking for a bandaid, what else. And what are those strange noises coming out of Mr. Cook's room on Sunday afternoons, always around 1:00. Apparently Ingrid has found some acetone, to remove the crazy glue sticking several froshly types to her. And Amoeba, ask Gonzo your stupid questions, and he will have absolutely no qualms about telling you to fuck off. Remember when women used to move to Ricketts because it was one of the only houses where they wouldn't get glommed? Its really true. Week's scared sight: Dan Weaver's drunk face two inches away... arrrrggghhhhh!!!! Does Nicole really sleep with a tire iron? Inquiring minds want to know. Well that's all for this week folks, and don't forget to ask Sarah about her nose spray episodes.

-Your faithful reporter,
Hank (the next president!)

Decorating Caltech's Float

All members of the Caltech/JPL community interested in volunteering to decorate Caltech's entry in the 1991 Rose Parade are invited to attend one of two float-decoration programs. These instructional presentations are both scheduled from 7:00 pm to 8:30 pm. The first will be in the Winnett Lounge on campus on Wednesday, Nov. 7; the second will be at Rosemont Pavilion on Tuesday, Nov. 13. Rosemont Pavilion, the Caltech float's building site, is located at 700 Seco Street at the corner of Rosemont (in the Arroyo, south of the Rose Bowl).

These programs will be presented by Ollie and Ross Young of Charisma Floats, which is constructing Caltech's "For Every Action... A Reaction" float. Also featured will be Richard Seekins, floral director, and Larry Crain, who is in charge of group activities. The object of both presentations is to acquaint Caltech/JPL people with the fundamental aspects of float decoration ("petal-pushing") and to provide a preliminary schedule for the Dec. 26-31 decoration period.

If you are interested in volunteering to decorate the float and cannot attend either of these programs, please call Lenore Freise at 356-2188 to ensure that you will be contacted later this year with additional information.

Cross-Country: A Tale of Two Spankys

by Chris Campo

This is a tale of Spankys. Specifically, the Caltech Men's Cross Country team qualifies as the definitive "SPANKY" of the SCI-AC Conference. The Spanky is defined as the team ranked lowest in the conference at the end of the season, not including incomplete teams (teams with less than five runners; i.e. La Verne College), which are termed "SuperSpankys."

At the Conference Championships held in grassy La Mirada Park last Saturday, Caltech won the title of Spanky hands down with a score of 140 points. The teams which had the great pleasure of brutally spanking the Beavers were Occidental (19 points), Pomona Pitzer (81 points) and Whittier (81 points), Claremont-Mudd (84 points), and Redlands (100 points).

Although the Beavers came out of the meet with sore behinds, there were a number of bright spots in favor of the hapless harriers. First, the conference as a whole is much, much stronger than it was last year.

Occidental, stung by last year's defeat to Tech, went on a wild recruiting spree this summer and came up with a ridiculously strong squad of Masochists this year (these running machines swept the first four spots at the meet with four times that all broke the previous conference record on the La Mirada course!)

Secondly, Whittier College had, simply, a Cinderella story season. Whittier, last year's conference Spanky, jumped to second place in the conference meet this year. Amidst all this intense competition, for the Beavers to have finished higher up than they did this season would have been a tall order.

The brightest spot in the meet for Caltech had a name. That name was Terminator. Yes, Dan Flees was certainly not a Spanky in any sense of the word. Flees powered through the 8k course to finish in a Phenomenal time of 27:19, good for 14th place. The top 20 in the race receive all-conference honors, so Dan will be the recipient of an all-conference certificate.

Scott Kister (28:25) and Chris Campo (28:59) turned in respectable performances, by last year's conference standards, but placed 26th and 29th this year with those times. Freshman Andy Zug, dubbed "Zug the Slug" by teammate Mark Lytle, finished in 34th place with a time of 29:19. Zug's solid performance hints of great things to come from him next year, and perhaps at this year's upcoming Regional meet.

"I went out too fast," commented Mark Lytle regarding his time of 30:28, good for 37th place. Mark's sidekick this season, sophomore Jonah Michaud (or is Mark Jonah's sidekick?) finished close to Mark as usual; 38th place with a time of 30:35.

Aaron Matzner, Tech's usual frontrunner, experienced severe pain in his thigh early in the race. "Aaron dropped out with my blessing," commented Coach Jim O'Brien. "He's going to be focusing on qualifying for NCAA Nationals at the upcoming Regional Meet. He's got bigger fish to fry."

At the conference meet, each team must designate seven runners to be the scoring runners for that team. The rest of the runners compete out of uniform and have no effect on the score of the meet; these runners are simply running to achieve a personal season best. All of Tech's non-scoring runners put in a good effort. The three best performances were given by sophomore Win Chamberlain (31:01), Freshman Ned Bowden (31:37) and senior John Pham (32:47). At the Regional Meet, held next Saturday in Bonelli Park, each team is allowed to enter only seven runners. Because of this, Coach O'Brien has decided to keep the top six Beavers from the conference meet, plus Aaron, working out. The top three nonscoreing finishers for Tech will continue working out as alternates.

The Women

The women ran over a 5k course at La Mirada, and were also the Spankys of the conference (139). The Beavers had their tails slapped by Oxy (25), Pomaona Pitzer (35), Whittier (81), and Claremont-Mudd-Scripps (88). Tech was at least better than the two Super-Spankys of the conference: Redlands and La Verne (incomplete teams.)

The star performer for the women was speedy sophomore Amy Hansen. Coach O'Brien was confident that Hansen could put in a bid for an all-conference finish (top 20), and so told members of the men's team to move around the course constantly updating Amy on her place in the race. "With 600 meters to go, she still needed to pass two runners," O'Brien recalled. "She ran a gutsy race and passed them to finish 20th in the conference." Hansen's time was 21:56.

Aimee Smith, strong second runner for the Beavers, captured 29th place with a time of 23:10. Aimee was less than satisfied with her performance. "I had a bad race." Following Smith were Beavers Golda Bernstein (23:55, 33rd place), Becky Green (24:36, 35th place,) and Emmeline Naranjo (25:41, 36th place)

Two of Tech's seven designated runners were not able to finish the race. Carol Johns fell victim to a vicious sprinklerhead and dropped out with a sprained ankle. Anna George suffered from low blood sugar and collapsed two miles into the race. She recovered and luckily only five scoring runners are necessary for a complete team.

Like the men, the women had a number of non-scoring participants at the race. The two best performances by nonscoreing Beavers were given by Gretchen Mullendore (25:17) and Jessie Haldeman (25:40).

Regional Meet

Concerning the regional meet, Coach O'Brien said, "I want to see people bearing down and really going for it." Caltech trainer and bi-athlete, Craig Reynolds commented, "some of you guys have to get off your asses and learn to hurt!"

Overintense Trainer of the Season Award

In the opinion of this sportswriter, this award should be given to Dan Flees in light of the following considerations: 1. He ran at 5:40 mile pace (I timed him) for the "easy warmup laps" prior to cross-country practice everyday. 2. He ran at speeds faster than 6:20 minutes per mile on several "easy road run" days. 3. He was heard to comment to Liz Warner at Millard Campground, "I'm much more tired after a good workout than I am after a race."
